<https://medicinehealth.leeds.ac.uk/staff/442/professor-allan-house>

Allan graduated in medicine from St Bartholomew's Hospital in London. He is Professor of Liaison Psychiatry in Leeds Institute of Health Sciences, which is part of the School of Medicine. As well as teaching he undertakes research into psychological and social aspects of physical illness. His research interests cover a number of aspects of liaison psychiatry - especially psychiatric problems complicating physical illness, unexplained medical symptoms and self-harm. Allan is interested in the physical health problems of adults with a learning disability. He is also more widely committed to music: he plays the clarinet in a local orchestra and wind trio and is a supporter of Opera North.
